FREDERICTON (CNB) - Aboriginal Team New Brunswick will participate in the sixth North American Indigenous Games being held in Denver and Colorado Springs, Colo., beginning July 2. Local Government Minister Rose-May Poirier, who is also minister responsible for Aboriginal Affairs, will be in attendance.

"As minister responsible for Aboriginal Affairs, I am very proud that New Brunswick is participating in the North American Indigenous Games," Poirier said. "I look forward to attending the games and cheering on the New Brunswick team as the athletes make their communities and the province proud."

The Aboriginal Affairs Secretariat and the Department of Wellness, Culture and Sport provided a provincial contribution of about $110,000 in support for the New Brunswick team.

The North American Indigenous Games celebrate the sport and culture of indigenous peoples across North America. Recognized by the Aboriginal Peoples and governments of Canada, and by tribal nations throughout the United States, the 2006 North American Indigenous Games will take place July 2-9.

The games offer competition in 16 sports for athletes of all abilities between the ages of 13-22. About 6,000 to 8,000 athletes and 40,000 to 50,000 supporters and spectators are expected to take part in the eight-day event.

Aboriginal Team New Brunswick is comprised of 64 athletes, coaches, managers, chaperones and mission staff, and the delegation will be competing in seven of the 16 sports.

"As part of the Five in Five Initiative, the Government of New Brunswick is committed to increasing sport, recreation and healthy active living within the province," said Wellness, Culture and Sport Minister Percy Mockler. "Participating in an event of this nature assists the goal of becoming the wellness province by having the biggest increase in physical fitness participation in Canada within five years."
